

Matteson Prepares For A Big Boom

New Sanitary Sewer Project
Will Drain 6,000 Acres

One of the largest sanitary districts which have ever been established in Cook County without any special legislation is, the new sanitary district at Matteson which will provide drainage and sewerage for over 6,000 acres of land.

The new sanitary district, to be known as the "Lincoln Highway Sanitary District" has been created primarily to supply sewerage for the new subdivisions which are springing up around Matteson. The limits of the new district run two and a half miles west of Matteson, 2 1/2 miles east and south, as far as Richton and north up to the Olympian Fields.

All sewerage and drainage will empty into Butterfield Creek which will pass thru a big filtering plant to be located north of Matteson. This plant is to cost about $35,000 to $40,000 and will purify all sewerage before it passes on into the Calumet river.

Attorney A. H. Krusemark representing the village of Matteson and a number of big real estate interests was instrumental in getting the Sanitary District petition thru the courts. The past week, a commission consisting of two judges of Cook County passed on and granted the petition, which they considered a very unique measure. As a result of the petition being granted a special election will be held at Matteson on November 22nd to vote on the establishing of the new sanitary district. Attorney Krusemark declared that the tax payers are about unanimously in favor of this measure which is expected to go over big.

The new improvement is to be built on the unit system. As the town builds up additional sewerage connections can be made to the main sewerage artery. When the entire system is complete, it will represent the expenditure of several hundreds of thousands of dollars.

With the completion of the Illinois Central electrification work, Matteson, as the terminal of Suburban service will naturally experience a big boom, and it has been pointed out that in order to get out siders to build up this section, adequate sewerage and drainage must be provided.

It is predicted that within the next three or four years Matteson will be a town of 10,000 inhabitants. This will mean that building operations will spread out west of Matteson toward Frankfort and north toward Tinley Park. This whole territory is in the midst of the biggest era of development that has ever been known in this locality.

Morning Star

Mission to Observe

16th Anniversary

Plans for the 16th annual celebration of the founding of the Morning Star Mission, to be held Nov. 15, 16, 17, 18, are now being made by its head and founder, Supt. Peter H. McCarthy.

The program has not been completed but Supt. McCarthy has been promised the assistance and presence of a number of Joliet ministers, among whom are:

The Rev. H. J. Johnson, Swedish M. E. church; Rev. E. E. Hastings, Central Presbyterian church; Rev. F. J. Andree, Swedish Lutheran church; Rev. John Goeken, First Evangelical Lutheran church; Rev. Wm. E. Godden, Ottawa St. M. E. church; Rev. Herbert Lohr, Second Presbyterian church; Rev. Ben. Jozsa, Hungarian church; Rev. Carey Moser, Ridgewood Baptist church; Rev. Arthur Mohms, Trinity M. E. church; Rev. J. J. Johnson, Swedish Mission church; Rev. I. A. Martin, First Christian church; Rev. C. E. Crawford, American Bible Society Chicago and the Rev. Geo. C. Caswell, Joyce M. E. church, Chicago.

The Rev. Mr. Caswell is the minister who converted Supt. McCarthy a little more than 16 years ago.

The following singers have promised their services:

The Jonathan Bible Class Chorus of the Swedish Baptist church; Mrs. Elmer Kelly, First Presbyterian church; John Broad, Second Presbyterian church, the choir of the Trinity M. E. church and "Mike and Mack" evangelistic singers from Chicago.

The program will be completed later. If anyone has never attended services at the Morning Star Mission this affords a splendid opportunity.

Oak Lawn Girl

Weds Chicago Man

A very pretty wedding took place Saturday evening November 7th in the home of Geo. F. Mann, when his niece, Miss Agnes Irene Riley became the bride of Albert James Smutney of Chicago.

The home was prettily decorated with palms, ferns and pink roses.

At the appointed hour the bridal party took their places to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march played by Miss Phyllis Jensen, and were met by The Rev. Mr. Reese pastor of the Oak Lawn Congregational church who read the ceremony. The bride wore a frock of white crepe, tulle veil and carried white roses. She was attended by Miss Mable Smutney and Miss Mamie Karasck sister and niece of the groom. The former being gowned in peach color chiffon and the later in green chiffon. Both carried pink roses.

The groom was attended by Geo. Farrell and Chas. Brabec.

Only immediate relatives witnessed the ceremony. Dinner was served at the close of the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Smutney have gone on a wedding trip to Michigan and upon their return will be at home to their friends at 71st and Paulina St. Chicago, where they have taken an apartment for the winter.

Two More Bremen
Twp. Farms Sold

Two very noteworthy real estate deals were closed the past week in Bremen Township. Wm. F. Koehler sold his farm in Cooper's Grove for $97,200.00 or at the rate of $700 per acre. The farm consists of 144 acres of which Mr. Koehler reserved 5 acres for his homestead. The property was sold to two Joliet Real Estate operators. The deal was closed in the office of Tage & Tage, Mr. Koehler's attorneys.

A big price was paid for the Ed. Huhnstock farm on Crawford Ave., when $150 per acre was paid for 130 acres to Mr. Huhnstock by Chicago real estate operators. Mr. Huhnstock also reserved 5 acres for homestead use.

Colored Colony Case
Dismissed By Court

The last vestige of the Liberia Land and Development Company's legal battle has vanished from the courts of Will County when Attorney A. H. Krusemark appeared before Judge Hill of the Will County Circuit Court last week and asked that the case which the colored colony promoters had started against him and Sheriff John Walker, be dismissed, which petition was granted.

Sometime ago the case was tried before Judge Hill but was continued for 15 days to give the plaintiffs time to amend their bill, but after the expiration of the allotted time they failed to appear, consequently Attorney Krusemark asked that the case be set aside. This means that the colored colony will not be established in Frankfort township and that the Scheer farm is not in their possession.

The colored promoters have lost out entirely in the Will County courts. They have also lost out in their suit against Fred Chamberlain for alleged breach of contract.

It is understood that the colony promoters still have hopes of acquiring land in New Lenox township and have been trying to buy the Gougar farm, offering $500 per acre with a cash down payment, but the owners of this farm, it is said, have refused to enter into any negotiations with the colored people.

Bowman Plant At

Mokena May Close

Rumor has it that Mokena is likely to lose the local Bowman Dairy Plant next Spring if the farmers now supplying milk to this plant fail to have their cattle tested.

Dairymen of this section have been fighting the tuberculin test as advocated by Dr. Bundesen, Health Commissioner of Chicago. The Bowman Dairy Company contends that if the tuberculin test measure is enforced they cannot accept milk from untested herds as they would not be allowed to sell such milk in Chicago. The Bowman contract is open for signature next April and if the dairymen by that time refuse to sign up, the closing of the Mokena Dairy will be the only alternative.

This would mean a big loss to Mokena and everyone in the community would be affected by the closing of the plant. The business people would be the hardest hit.

On the other hand the dairymen take the stand that the test measure if enforced will mean the squeezing out of the small dairy man as he will be unable to stand the loss if his herd is condemned. As it is, the state and the Federal government have not appropriated enough money to pay the dairymen for cattle condemned.

On Saturday night of this week dairymen members of the Mokena local of the Milk Producers will hold a meeting at the Frankfort hall to discuss the question "Shall We Tuberculin Test our Dairy Cattle?" The meeting is of vital importance and the dairymen are urged to attend.

PARENTS CAN SET GOOD EXAMPLE TO CHILDREN BY OBEYING SAFETY LAWS;
PRINCIPAL CAUSES OF FATALITIES

Pointing out that a large percentage of the 19,000 deaths due to automobile accidents in the United States are children, Secretary of State Louis L. Emmerson urges the need of a better understanding of highway safety on the part of parents and school teachers.

Children can be trained in the schools in safety, he says, but the primary responsibility rests upon parents. He points out that a recent summary shows that the commonest types of automobile accidents to children are due to:

Running into the street without looking in either direction.
Running into the street in front of, or behind, standing vehicles.
Crossing the street in the middle of the block.
Crossing the street diagonally.
Crossing the street with an open umbrella obstructing the view.
Running into the street after a ball.
Playing in the street.
Using a coaster wagon or express wagon in the street.
Roller skating in the street.
Chasing another child into the street.
Hitching onto an automobile, street car or other vehicle.
Riding on the running board of an automobile.
Getting into or out of a moving vehicle.
Jumping on an ice wagon or huckster's wagon.
Riding a bicycle in a crowded street.
Mr. Emmerson believes that parents could help the children acquire safety habits by themselves obeying all traffic regulations at all times, thus setting a good example to children and teaching fundamental traffic rules to them and insisting upon strict observance.
"Children should be warned," Mr. Emmerson says, "to cross the street only at regular crossings; wait until there is a clear space before crossing the street; to watch and obey the signals of a traffic officer where there is one; to play only in safe places and to look after the safety of younger children."

Red Cross Worker

Addresses Oak

Lawn Club

Mr. Thos. Temple of the Chicago Chapter of the American Red Cross gave a very interesting talk on Red Cross work at the Community Club last Thursday evening. Mr. Temple after going through the World War remained with Mr. Hoover's forces in Czechoslovakia, ministering to sick and starving children. After his return to this country he was a State Organizer for the Red Cross and is now doing field work. A short program was given and the evening was enjoyed by all.

Piece of Corset

Steel Recovers

A Stolen Car

On December 1st of last year a Ford coupe belonging to Howard Ayers of New Lenox was stolen and no trace was found of the car but a little piece of corset steel led to its recovery last week and thereby hangs this story.

One day last week Mr. Ayers was in the Joliet Motor Company repair shop to have some repair work and while waiting he happened to glance across the room and saw a Ford coupe of 1924 and it looked for all the world just like the car that had been stolen, but make sure that it was he looked for several indications marks among them being a piece of steel he had used in patching a brake rod, a rod he had placed under the cover of the luggage compartment in the back of the car, the rod being used to hold the cover up. Upon investigation it was found that the car had all of these things and Mr. Ayers positively knew it was his car. The motor however had been changed. Mr. Ayer reported the matter to the police and a man by name of Smith of Joliet has been arrested by the Joliet authorities on suspicion that he may have some knowledge as to the theft of the car.

The case has been set for a hearing in Joliet Saturday of this week.

Mokena Answers

Final Summons

Mrs. Fred C. Mau, resident of Mokena for 54 years, died Nov. 5th at the State Hospital at Kankakee. She was born August 26, 1869 in Cartersville, Mo. Her father, Christ Minger died while she was yet an infant and after his death she came with her family to Mokena when a year old and has lived in this community ever since.

She took up teaching as her life work. She taught school for twenty years in this section and the eastern part of Will County.

In June 1908 she was united in marriage with Fred C. Mau of Mokena. She was in poor health for many years and bore a cross the weight of which no one knew but herself and her God. The latter part of her life she went thru much affliction and suffering. She was of a kind and gentle disposition, bearing all her tribulations with a spirit of humility.

Her mother, Mrs. Minger, passed away four years ago. She had taken care of her mother who was an invalid for many years. She is survived by her husband, F. C. Mau, one sister, Mrs. Mary Mau of Mokena, two brothers, John Minger of Peotone and Henry Minger of Manhattan.

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon from the late home to the St. John Evangelical church, Rev. Mr. Kurz of Marthasville, Mo., officiating. The funeral services were largely attended and the floral offerings were many and beautiful. Burial took place in the St. John cemetery.

badly hurt Sunday night when the buggy they were in was struck by an automobile driven by David Law of Oak Forest, the accident occurring on the concrete highway in the north end of the village. Mrs. Rick was the most seriously hurt, a bone in her leg being shattered. The buggy was smashed to kindling and the horse was also injured.

Watch For It.

The News-Bulletin has been so fortunate as to get the privilege of publishing a highly interesting and educational article from the pen of Rev. Otto C. Frey, pastor of the Green Garden M. E. church. The article deals with higher education and will be well worth reading.

The opening installment will be printed in next weeks issue and will appear each week until the entire article has been run.

Women, Don't Suffer!

Kokomo, Ind.—"I was suffering with all kinds of aches and pains—head, back and side, dizzy spells and nervousness. The doctors tried to help me and I tried all kinds of remedies but got little relief. I was advised to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I hesitated on account of the failure of other treatments, but at last I tried it. One bottle helped me so much I got two more, and by the time I had taken them I was feeling like a different woman. It had relieved me of all aches and pains and made me well."—Mrs. Roy Giffey, 1225 W. Taylor St. All dealers.

The Rarest Virtue

Author Upton Sinclair said at a Pasadena picnic:

"Truth-telling is a rare virtue. It's perhaps the rarest. Look at these modernist divisions. They're telling the truth at least about their beliefs. But think how long they've been lying about them from the pulpit.

"I said one day to a hack writer: 'That article of yours in Scribblers', 'Truth Is Stranger Than Fiction', certainly takes the cake. It's bound to attract attention. Where did you get your facts?'

"The hack writer smirked. 'Made 'em up,' he said."

No more RHEUMATISM

IT'S GONE! That awful agony! Rheumatism can't stand the rich, red blood that S. S. S. helps Nature build.

But rheumatism will bring pain and misery to your joints and muscles just as long as you are without plenty of rich, red blood in your system.

It's the red-blood-cells that S. S. S. helps Nature build that drive out of your system the impurities that cause rheumatism. And until you do build up your blood to where it is pure and rich and red, you simply can't get rid of rheumatism.

And S. S. S. is the thing. Red blood conquers rheumatism. Everybody knows that.

S. S. S. means millions of red-blood-cells—means health all over. No more rheumatism. Nights of rest—days of joy, filled with the happiness of accomplishment—made possible by a body brimful of red blooded life, energy and vitality.

That's what the end of rheumatism means—that's what S. S. S. brings to you. Get S. S. S. from your druggist. The larger bottle is more economical.

BE MERCIFUL!

SYNOPSIS.—Living in the small English village of Darbury, old-fashioned and sedate place, Barbara Stockley, daughter of a widowed mother, is seen to celebrate her marriage to Hugh Rochdale, rich and well connected. Barbara is adventurous, and has planned, with an aunt, an airplane trip to Australia. Major Alan Croft, famous as an aviator, is to be the pilot. At her first meeting with Croft Barbara is attracted by his manner and conversation, different from the cut-and-dried conventions of her small town. They set out. Barbara, her aunt, Croft, and a mechanic. Word in a few days comes to Darbury that the plane is missing and its occupants believed lost. Croft and Barbara, after the wreck of the airplane in a furious storm, reach an apparently uninhabited island in the Pacific ocean. The other two members of the party had perished. The two castaways build a shelter. In Croft's absence Barbara is attacked by a cannibal. Croft rescues her. Croft discovers a party of blacks, apparently reconnoitering. Croft fixes up an electrical guard which scares off an attacking party. Secure from immediate danger, Croft and Barbara settle down to make the best of things. Croft, who has traveled much among savages, makes friends with the blacks. Croft and Barbara fall in love. The man betrays his passion but restrains it. The girl desperately tries to remain loyal to Hugh.

Near the blazing fire stood Croft. His hands hung loosely at his sides; his gaze was fixed upon the distant, heaving water. At the sound of the girl's hurrying steps, he turned quickly. "A ship!" he announced briefly. "Is it coming?"

"No." Silently they looked at each other: the man inscrutable as ever, the girl clasping and unclasping her hands, her lips a little tremulous. In the turmoil of her emotions, she sank upon the ground at last, and buried her head in her hands.

Croft looked at her, his own feelings in much the same chaotic state. The hope of once again playing the part among his fellowmen—dear to a man of action—of achieving the ambitions ruthlessly destroyed at the very moment of attainment, had been raised and dashed almost simultaneously. But in that same moment he faced the full knowledge of what all this Eden-like existence meant to him—the immensity of his increasing hopes, bitterness in their uncertainty. And, as the flames ascended, he faced abruptly the probable termination of it all!

He controlled, but not without difficulty, the emotions rioting within his heart, when those tense few minutes, fraught with so much meaning—such crucial pages in the Book of Fate—relaxed. When the far-off spiral of smoke faded into the clouds, as the distant vessel vanished, he leaped upon a boulder and threw his arms wide. The gesture might have been a welcome to freedom, or an acquiescence in the inevitable; in either case it savored of "kismet."

He turned suddenly toward her. "I am sorry," he said. "I feared it would upset you—today."

"Why today?" she asked curiously.

A look of incredulity crept into his face.

"It is December twentieth. Wasn't that to be your wedding day?"

She sank back, staring at him blankly. Twice she opened her lips to speak, but no words came. At last, slowly, she turned her gaze seaward.

"It was!" she murmured. "I—had—forgotten." Again her head dropped into her hands.

Low as the words were, he heard them. A wild joy flashed through him. Because he dared not trust himself or his voice, he left her—dashing, with throbbing pulse, toward the palm grove. Was there a singing in the air around, as if every bird upon the island had mistaken coming night for the dawn, or was it the inward song of his heart?

For long Barbara sat where he had left her, without looking up, though knowing that she was alone. She faced her shrinking soul for the first time; the beacon burned itself out beside her; the sun sank lazily in a sky aflame.

Until today she had taken for granted the supposition that, underneath the growing enchantment of this land, the craving for Hugh and rescue still predominated. . . . Full of shame, she realized this supposition to have been but a bubble burst at this first test. She understood, with a sense of shock, the small space now occupied by Hugh in her thoughts. Yet—seemed, in memory, as dear as ever. Tears brimmed in her eyes; she realized, at last, how this very dearness proved its vast separation from love. . . .

Like a bird newly aware of freedom after narrowly escaping capture, she stood up and looked around with lingering eyes, which now knew how close a hold the brilliant scene had upon her heart. If ever rescue came, it would bring pangs of grief instead of the unalloyed joy she had supposed. . . . Again her thoughts turned to Hugh, wondering what were his feelings to-day. . . . And her sensitive heart smote her, overwhelming her with renewed shame. . . .

Hurriedly she set about laying supper, hoping vainly to still the awakened depths; then sought further occupation. Her glance fell upon her luggage. With sudden decision, probably induced by a hazy idea of recapturing the instincts of civilization to combat unruly emotions, she seized a box and opened it. . . .

When presently Croft returned, he was met on the threshold by a wistful-eyed figure clothed in something soft and white and altogether womanly, instead of the blouse and old skirt. He stopped abruptly; then with rather grim lips, smiled.

"So we returned to civilization in spirit, if not in fact?"

His uncanny knack of reading her motives caused her to give him, as usual, the swift deep-sea glimpse which he sought.

"Alan, I want to tell you something." "What is it?" he asked, breathing quickly at what he saw in her eyes.

"I saw a shark today. And," hurriedly, "—oh, Alan! I realized all you have done for me, all you have risked and spared me—"

"All my invisible halo, in fact?"

"She ignored the flattery. "And I feel simply full of—"

"Of—what, Barbara? What?"

"Gratitude—"

"Gratitude!" He turned away, with a short laugh.

"I can do so little in turn to make things tolerable for you here," she went on, in the warmth of her heart.

"Your life was so full—"

He looked round again quickly. "No fuller than yours with the man you—"

"Ah," she interrupted passionately. "Don't! I—know."

Her voice went into silence. For a long time he sat watching the darkness creep swiftly over the water.

A fierce craving for advice, sympathy even disapproval, so long as she could unburden her agitated mind, mastered the girl. She took one of her old impulsive plunges.

"I am so troubled!" she exclaimed suddenly.

"Tell me just what is troubling you," he answered, his voice softening.

"Loneliness?"

The clasp of his fingers encouraged confidence.

"No, no! This wild life, this lovely island, seem to creep up and up, engulfing me, so that I—dread the thought of the old restricted existence. Alan, it's terrible. It—it's intoxicating—it frightens me! I never crave for the world and a wider sphere, as I did in Darbury. I know I ought to be pining for rescue; to long for—those at home; to be unhappy. I've tried, honestly! But—"

Laughter interrupted her.

"Tried! Have you really? Then—"

"We are happy here?"

"That's the trouble; don't you see? I don't know why, but I am. I was even glad when the ship didn't come tonight! It's just as if there's some spirit in this island which—draws one up and up—Do you think me utterly heartless?"

He laughed again; and she wondered at the exultant ring of it.

"I think you're a goose—waking up! Have you only just realized the 'spirit'—on the island?" Then he became serious. "How could your unhappiness help those in England? They have long ago given us up for dead. Besides, no forced emotions are worth anything."

"No. That's the chief point; they shouldn't need to be forced. Hugh—once—called me heartless—"

He drew her hands downward, pulling her up close behind him.

"I'm going to talk quite straight, Barbara. I gather the real fact is—you are not fretting for—Hugh?"

She made no reply; but the fingers in his closed spasmodically. He went on, his voice low, and deeply earnest.

"Love can be forced least of all. If circumstances combine to prove that mistakes have been made, it is no good struggling against the knowledge! However painful, it is better than a lifetime of vain regret. One of the cruellest tragedies in this funny old world is the ease with which such mistakes can be made—unconsciously—all in good faith."

He turned his face upward and caught the glint of tears in her eyes. "Ah my dear! Don't take it so much to heart."

She gave a strangled little sob. "He—cared. Hugh will ever be—faithful. He is the truest—"

"Yes I know; one of the very best. But marriage with him wouldn't have satisfied your nature. You know that."

"Oh!" she cried startled. "But I shall still marry him—if we get rescued. Please don't think me so disloyal as all that!"

He smiled over this third unconscious appeal for his good opinion. "D'you call it loyal, then, to carry out a compact when the very motive upon which it was founded has proved an illusion? You would be living a lie all your life—unfair to you both. Surely he wouldn't wish it?"

"You don't quite understand," she protested. "I am just as fond of him. It would still be the same."

"Barbara," he said softly, "the love of man and woman is not fondness."

She could not speak. Her heart seemed to rise in her throat and throb there; her limbs trembled. In sudden panic she tried to free her hands, her womanhood realizing his manhood as it had never consciously done before.

The instinct of the wild bird to flee and hide was hers. Her turmoil communicated itself to him, in that vibrant silence. He looked up into her face, seeing there what he had but glimpsed on the night in the natives' hut.

"Barbara!" he whispered shakily. "Barbara! Be true to yourself—"

With a little cry, she wrenched her hands free. As he sprang to his feet she turned, and, without a word, fled into the hut. . . .

He stood still for a minute; then he drew a quick unsteady breath, and strode to the shore, to pace up and down up and down far into the night. . . .

Barbara lay awake throughout long hours facing in terrible isolation the great question of sex. What she had dimly realized and vaguely feared, since that revealing moment during their visit to the natives, now loomed up in its naked reality to alter the whole aspect of their life here together. She faced the true position: realized clearly that she and this man were cut adrift from all the safety of other human companionship, all the restraints of civilization, with this terrible, eternal attraction now menacing them. Escape from it was impossible. She understood now the nature of the abyss yawning below the precipice which had threatened her of late. This new knowledge illumined the past, even to the strange magnetic attraction,

His tone was cool enough to reassure a dozen nervous women. She was conscious of a great relief as she joined him in the doorway.

X

The next few days were strangely happy. The faint chance of rescue caused their little hut to seem dearer, the wild free life more enchanting. The spirits of both had never been so high. Barbara, having conquered the sex problem with such sublime simplicity, cast it from her mind, surrendering herself wholly to the engrossing happiness of the moment.

That her very subterfuge, proving all it did, had been the death-knell to her object, never entered her head.

On Christmas eve they collected armfuls of greenery, the girl clinging with unconscious pathos to the old customs in which she had been reared.

"Ah!" she cried inconsequently. "Isn't it all—beautiful?"

"What?" he asked, yet knowing full well.

"Oh—everything! Christmas—here! Freedom from Mr. Horne!" She sprang upon a suitcase, trails of vine in her hands, and laughed down at him.

He came close to her, the same ecstasy lurking in his own eyes.

"I wonder if you realize all you have implied?"

"What?" She looked startled.

She turned away, and fastened a vine tendril to the bamboo. He watched her silently, noticing the change wrought in her by these past months. The wild-rose air had vanished: in its stead the warm blood flowed red beneath a sunburned skin; her feet were brown and hardened. Yet, where the depths were concerned, remained the old timidity which was, paradoxically, her greatest lure and protection. One false step and she would, he knew, be "off on the wing," scared as a young partridge. But Alan's small store of patience had been drained to the last drops.

Finishing the decoration, she paused beside him, considering the effect. Ferns and palm leaves swayed in the corners; trailing greenery decorated walls and roof; flowers stood upon the cabin table.

"Cozy, isn't it?" she asked, looking up for his approval.

"Very cozy," he replied, looking only at her. "What a little home-maker you are."

She flushed, and again turned hastily away.

"We'll hang this remaining vine over the entrance, outside. Will you bring the suitcases?"

He carried out the substitute for a ladder; and up she sprang. Deftly, with the art of experience, she caught the trailing foliage up here, letting it hang in clusters there.

"And that middle cluster?" asked Alan, beside her. "Is that for mistletoe?"

Her head rose quickly, as that of a young deer scenting danger. With a quick glance down at him, she stretched out her hand toward the bunch; but he put up a long arm to prevent its removal. And, in a flash, all the security of the past days fell to ruins. For while she strove again to seize the vine leaves, the suitcases overbalanced, and she toppled down upon him.

He caught her and held her. He clasped her close to a thumping heart, and buried his face in her hair. . . .

For a moment she lay inert; then she began to struggle, gasping, sobbing.

But his self-control was going. His grip became fierce; she felt his hot breath upon her neck. . . .

"Alan!" she cried wildly. "For God's sake—"

The fear, as of one drowning, in the cry, steadied his reeling senses. Still clasping her in his arms, he sank down upon the rock. His darkened eyes mesmerized her own; the abyss yawned wide at her feet. . . . she was conscious only of being swept along, caught in some remorseless torrent, toward the edge of the precipice. . . . slipping, falling. . . . his lips were close to her own. . . .

"Alan!" with almost superhuman effort she managed to gasp his name again. "I can't bear it. No! No! Be merciful!"

Faintly, with parched mouth, the desperate petition seemed wrung from her very soul.

His arms relaxed abruptly, a subtle change coming into their grasp when he realized her trembling.

"Why are you afraid?" he murmured unsteadily.

She raised herself, her face very white under its sunburn.

"Don't you see? If you do—this how can I go on living with you here?"

He smiled faintly, the mad tumult of his blood abating.

"Where else would you live? With the natives for—chaperonage?"

She drew a sobbing breath, looking around with a pathetic gesture of helplessness which touched his heart. The passion faded yet more from his face. He pressed her against him again, this time protectively.

"The way of a maid with a man" is one of the mysteries. What next?

Bliss

One becomes used to the frank displays of marital felicity, pre and post, that occur on the top of Fifth Avenue busses. Here is a slight variation. The young man had just visited the barber and was describing the details to his wife. Finally words failed him—off came his hat and his shining head was placed under his wife's nostrils; that she might inhale the aroma of the hair tonic to which he had accumbent.

A moment's reflection, and he had decided on his course. "I see. Henceforth, then, we are—two gay dogs together? What a good idea!"

Pup Couldn't Digest Big Feast of Nails

Hop, Skip and Jump, each a four-months-old police dog, found a bag of nails while they were playing under the counter of Max Goldman's trunk store, 95 West Houston street. They swallowed the nails, and when they began indicating that they did not feel well, Goldman took them to a hospital for animals.

There Dr. Alfred W. Meyer operated on Skip, removing a pound of nails from his stomach, but Skip died. The surgeons then operated on Hop, and in his interior found 558 wire nails, each an inch long; one three-inch nail, two long pieces of bent wire and a stone as large as a plum. Hop recovered from the operation and probably will get well. Doctor Meyer explored Jump, X-ray pictures having shown the presence of nails. —New York Herald-Tribune.

Evidently Knew Cabmen

I was right behind two flappers who emerged from the Hotel Roosevelt recently.

"Have you plenty of change?" asked one of them as a taxi driver pulled up to the curb.

"Sure," said the driver. "Let me see," said the girl. The driver dug down in his pocket and came up with a handful of dimes and quarters.

"All right," said the flapper, giving him loose change, the once over, "we'll take you."

And a moment later after she had given him the address, they were off. —Karl K. Kitchen in New York Evening World.

How Robert M. Koenig Found Remedy for Pimply Skin

For years my skin would break out every once in a while—and ointments did very little to help me.

I read a doctor's article stating that pimply skin usually comes from the stomach—and bowels not getting rid of the poisons.

I tried Carter's Little Liver Pills for a few days—and since that time my skin is smooth and clear. Now I tell my friends the right way of getting rid of a broken out skin—and also of steering clear of upset stomach and sick headache. Carter's are all you claim for them.

HOW TWO WOMEN AVOIDED OPERATIONS

The Following Letters of Mrs. Thurston and Mrs. Beard Carry an Encouraging Message to Other Sick Women

MRS. ETHEL THURSTON
324 N. PINE STREET, LIMA, OHIO
Lima, Ohio.—"I want to tell you how your medicine has helped me. For weeks I suffered with awful pains from inflammation and I was in such misery that I had to bend double to get relief. I could not be touched or jarred, had awful pain all over my abdomen and could not touch my feet to the floor. It was impossible for me to straighten up and the pains never ceased. I took treatments for some time and finally was told I would have to have an operation. I do not believe in operations, and I had read so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I told my husband I would try it before I gave up. I soon began to feel that it was doing me good. The awful misery began to leave me, also the backache. I have a good appetite and am gaining in weight. Taking the medicine was the best thing I ever did. I feel like it has saved my life and I do not hesitate to say so to my friends. At least it saved me from a dreaded operation and I am still taking it. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about the medicine."

—Mrs. ETHEL THURSTON, 324 North Pine Street, Lima, Ohio.

Mrs. Beard's Letter

Eddy, Texas.—"I will write you a few words, thinking it will do some one else good. Two doctors said I would have to be operated on because for nearly twelve months I suffered from a weakness from which I could get no relief. I was restless and nervous and was not able to walk across the house. They said it was the Change of Life. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the newspapers, and as I could not get any help from doctors I thought I would give that a trial. I began with the liquid and it helped me some, then you advised me to take the tablet form and I began to improve rapidly. I have gained in weight from 105 to 170 pounds. I recommend it to all women with this trouble."
—Mrs. M. E. BEARD, R. No. 1, Box 143, Eddy, Texas.

Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Ireland After Bettors

Irish Free State authorities are strictly enforcing the laws against gambling. A man in Fermoy who had been running a roulette wheel for 18 years was prosecuted as "a rogue and a vagabond" under an act of George IV. His defense was that he had done it on his own property which, as he could exclude anybody from it, was not a public place. The justice, confirming this view of the law, dismissed the charge against him.

Mrs. Crane had indigestion for ten years; Tanlac brought immediate relief.

As a climax to long years of suffering, Mrs. Hattie Crane got so bad she couldn't sleep and there were days when she couldn't walk across the floor. At times the gas pressure was so great she could scarcely breathe. She was faint and dizzy. She writes: "Tanlac brought immediate relief and six bottles were enough to rid me of my troubles and bring back the joy of living. My health is better than ever and I am so pleased with Tanlac I praise it to everybody."

M. E. Church Notes

Rev. Glen T. Beaty, Pastor.

The pastor was glad to become acquainted with so many fine young people at his party last Friday night. He is only sorry all young folks were not there.

Rev. Beaty will preach on "The Church" next Sunday at 7 p. m. There will also be a "Miscellaneous Song Service." You are invited to our services.

Do not forget Sunday School at 10 a. m. every Sunday. Classes for all.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Beagley and son Junior, Mrs. Milton Uthe and daughters Geraldine and Lavone, and Mrs. William Hoffman, visited Friday evening with their grandma Mrs. Christ Yunker at Mokena.

Mr. and Mrs. William Junker and son Ben, spent Sunday at the Frick home in Mokena.

Mrs. Arthur Beagley entertained at dinner Friday, Mrs. Milton Uthe and daughters, and Mrs. William Hoffman, of Orland.

Milton Bettenhausen is sick with Scarlet fever.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Cooper spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Newton.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Beagley and son Junior, spent Sunday evening in Chicago.

Prof. W. N. Lathrop made a pying trip to Beloit, Wis., Friday and visited with his parents, returning on Sunday.

The Mokena Tennis Club gave a party at the school house Saturday evening. A fine time was had. Louis Grader had the misfortune to fall and sprain his arm.

Rev. Beaty, pastor of the M. E. church entertained at the church on Friday evening, the young people of Mokena. This was a get acquainted affair and was in the form of an "Automobile party". The whole evening was devoted to different automobile stunts, as, patching a tire, filling the radiator, changing tires etc., which was highly interesting and entered into with a real sportsmanship spirit. The guests were divided into groups known as, the Lincoln, Ford and Chevrolet cars. The later group winning the most points. Singing was also enjoyed and after serving refreshments, a short witty talk by Rev. Beaty was enjoyed by the 48 present. Mrs. Elmer Cooper, Mrs. Floyd Healy, Mrs. W. N. Lathrop and Mrs. Wm. Semmler assisted the host in the evening's pleasures.

Simon Hohenstein is having a vacation from his duties at the State penitentiary.

Mrs. Harry Mall is ill. Judge John Schultz has gone on a trip to Alabama.

The Mokena Blue Streaks Football Team came out victorious at Tinley Park last Sunday by a score of 6 to 0. The Mokena Team was much out weighed. The features of the game was, a trick forward pass received by Mokena team's dashing right half, Ed. White, making a touchdown in the last two minutes of play.

The Mokena team challenges any team in their vicinity, weighing not over 135 pounds, on their home grounds.

H. T. Daniels of Chicago visited in Mokena Monday with relatives.

CARD OF THANKS

I wish to thank all my friends and relatives for their sympathy and kind deeds shown during my recent bereavement.

WORTH

The Everay Club had the pleasure of enrolling Marie Martin and Johanna Rosenberg at their last meeting, held Thursday, November 5th at the home of Lillian Kaufman. We now have a membership of 19 young ladies. The girls welcomed back Ethel Foyle who has not been able to attend the meetings for sometime on account of illness. Ruth Mitchell, our little ray of sunshine and incidentally our youngest member, arrived a little late but got there in time for the refreshments. The next meeting will be on November 19th at Harriett and Imogene's home.

In making up the church bulletin this month, our printers made an error in stating that the library would be open for use on Tuesday and Thursday nights. This should have been Tuesday and Friday nights from 7:30 to 9:00 p. m. We have enough books to supply everyone in the community, so come early and avoid the rush.

Producing Liquid Air

Liquid air is a transparent, limpid and intensely cold liquid, slightly blue in color, and of about the same density as water. It is prepared by subjecting air to great pressure and then cooling it by its own expansion to a temperature below the boiling point of its constituents (nitrogen, 194 degrees centigrade; oxygen, 183 degrees centigrade). Its chief use is as a refrigerant.

CONSERVE OIL RESOURCES

MIDCONTINENT FIELD MUST REMAIN AS SUREST SOURCE OF SUPPLY.

Present Situation of Oil Industries in Midcontinent Explained by E. W. Marland.

Kansas City, Missouri.—Reviewing the development of the oil industry and its present condition, which is causing much anxiety in the Midcontinent field, E. W. Marland, president of the Marland Oil Company, said in an address to Western Petroleum Refiners in Kansas City on Tuesday, July 31:

"Fifty years ago the petroleum industry was in its infancy. Twenty years ago it was still in its youth and formative period.

Then the advent of the automobile brought a new use for petroleum products.

The rapid increase in the number of automobiles in the world and the increase in machinery dependent upon petroleum for its motive power and lubrication had favored the resourcefulness, energy and capital of the petroleum industry to keep its production in pace with consumption.

Rapid Growth of Oil Output. Twenty years ago we were producing and consuming currently 100 million barrels of petroleum per year. Ten years ago the consuming public was calling upon the industry to furnish 250 million barrels of oil for its consumption.

Five years ago the world needed 400 million barrels of oil. This year's consumption will probably total 750 million barrels.

Not Enough Three Years Ago. Three years ago the world viewed with alarm the ever increasing figure of consumption.

World production of oil was not keeping pace with world consumption and men in the automobile industry and all branches of the mechanical industry were talking of the necessity of finding a substitute for the petroleum which they feared could not long be depended upon to supply their needs for motor fuel.

The United States was at that time supplying approximately 85 per cent of the petroleum used in the world, and oil men were advised and encouraged to intensify the search for the hidden pools of petroleum in the United States, and go forth to the far corners of the earth and search for oil which would be needed when our petroleum reserves should become exhausted.

The manufacturers of petroleum products were at the same time advised and encouraged to improve their manufacturing methods so that they might recover greater amounts of gasoline from the oil they were running through their plants.

In fear of an impending oil shortage, prices of petroleum and its products were advanced to new high peaks in order to encourage the search for oil and to encourage the perfection of refining methods.

Oil Producing Doesn't Pay.

The producing branch of the oil business, as a whole, had never during the previous fifty years of its experience been a paying business. Probably 2,000 millions of dollars more had been spent in the effort to find and produce oil than the oil produced had sold for. Thousands of men had spent their fortunes and their lives in the vain effort to find and produce this valuable commodity so carefully hidden by Nature. A few only had succeeded in finding and producing oil at a profit where many had failed. None had solved or have yet completely solved Nature's secret of hiding her petroleum treasure.

High Prices Stimulated Drilling.

Three years ago the consuming public, or that branch of the petroleum industry serving the consuming public, in addition to advising further search for petroleum and improvements of refining methods, advanced petroleum prices to such a point that men were substantially encouraged to renew their efforts. An unprecedented era of drilling set in which reached its peak in the summer of 1920, when the industry was completing at the rate of one hundred oil wells and dry holes in the United States every day. Over 2 million dollars a day were being spent in the search for oil. Hundreds of millions of dollars were spent and lost that year in the effort to find oil. Thousands of men lost part, if not all, of their savings of a lifetime.

Overproduction Broke The Market.

A few individuals and a few companies were rewarded for their intelligence, energy and capital expended by finding themselves possessors of new producing oil properties. A dozen new pools of major importance were discovered, but before even their discoverers could gain a profit commensurate with their risk the inexorable law of supply and demand had operated against them, and oil was selling at when they commenced their search.

The frantic search for oil carried on about three years ago resulted in the finding of new pools in which were drilled about four thousand wells, which now produce an aggregate of over 1 million barrels of oil a day, or an average of over 250 barrels per well.

Production Can't Keep Up. This amount of oil, in addition to the 1 million barrels coming daily from 275,000 wells, an average of less than four barrels per well, brought about a condition of overproduction. Ten to 20 per cent more oil is being produced than the world's markets need.

It is common knowledge that the rate of production of new wells declines rapidly and that in the natural order of things these four thousand new wells will not be producing one-half so much oil within six months as they are producing today and that unless we find within a year new pools which will produce a large number of new wells, we will have the oil fear of an oil famine again before us. Never in the past ten years has the proportion of flush or new production to the total production of the world been so great as it is today. Over one-half of the oil produced in the United States is highly flush unsettled production and is coming from less than 2 per cent of the total number of wells.

For that reason today's plenty is no insurance against tomorrow's famine, but, on the contrary, will, if I read the signs aright, make something very like a famine certain to come at an early date.

From my experience with oil wells I would say that the production from the wells now producing in the United States will not exceed 1 1/2 million daily this time next year, or 1/4 million barrels daily less than the present rate of consumption.

Serious Midcontinent Problem.

Meanwhile, the problems vexing the petroleum industry of the world—the United States—and especially that section operating in the central part of the United States, are exceedingly difficult.

For the past ten years the central part of the United States, called in the petroleum industry the "Midcontinent," has been called upon to supply a very large proportion of the oil used in the world. It has produced both crude oil and refined products greatly in excess of the consuming demands of that region and this excess has been eagerly sought by refiners and marketers of the Atlantic seaboard and other parts of the United States and of Europe, and in several years it has been called upon to supply part of the needs of the consuming public in California.

Anticipating that, these outside markets, to which they had become accustomed and to which they had developed their facilities and accommodated their operations, would this year continue to depend upon the Midcontinent field for their needs, both producers and refiners of that section increased their facilities and operations to meet the requirements of these markets and their normal increase in demand. They accordingly developed a larger crude supply and likewise manufactured and stored a large amount of gasoline in readiness for those expected and heretofore constantly growing demands of the motor car season.

Flood of Low Cost California Oil.

In the meantime there were discovered and developed simultaneously in the Los Angeles Basin of California, near the sea coast, three very prolific new light oil fields whose aggregate production mounted rapidly to an amount equal to 60 or 70 per cent of the entire Midcontinent output. The oil fields of California were already adequate to care for the needs of that region, so this newly developed supply was forced into new markets, which were the old markets of the Midcontinent field.

Because of the advantageous location of these new California fields and the very large wells found, crude oil of a quality only slightly inferior to the Midcontinent fields was profitably produced and marketed at a figure which represents less than one-half of the actual cost of producing oil in the Midcontinent field.

Likewise the cost of transporting both crude oil and refined products from California by water to the markets of the Atlantic seaboard and Europe is much less than the cost from central Midcontinent points.

In some instances Midcontinent transportation cost on refined products is almost double that of California to markets previously enjoyed by the Midcontinent.

Curtailed Midcontinent Market.

Manifestly, under these circumstances, both the Midcontinent producers and the Midcontinent refiners found themselves supplanted in the outside markets by those cheaper products of California and with a supply on hand prepared for those distant markets were compelled to dump these products upon their own markets within the central part of the United States.

This was done, with the customary result attendant upon dumping products upon an already saturated market. Weak refiners, unexpectedly finding themselves with a large supply of refined products, but with no demand, were compelled to sacrifice their products at any price, and the producer, having already drilled his wells, likewise attempted to force his products upon an already saturated market, with the result that both crude oil and refined products were being freely offered upon the Midcontinent markets at prices greatly below the cost of producing and manufacturing.

This is a common economic occurrence in every industry and can be expected to disappear only when supply and demand equalize.

Equalizing Supply and Demand.

The equalization of supply to demand in the petroleum industry may come about either by the ruthless and inexorable law of supply and demand working alone through its price factor or may be brought about by an intelligent curtailment of the output of its wells and its refineries.

Sincere advocates for each of these methods of equalizing supply with demand will be earnest in support of their viewpoint. Not only the interests of the petroleum industry, but those of the public as well, must be consulted in the choice of methods. It is well, therefore, that the operations of each should be studied.

In the oil industry constantly recur periods of overproduction and underproduction to an extent not duplicated by any other important industry. This is due to inability to foresee the discovery of new pools of oil or to estimate their importance for some time after discovery, and the further difficulty of inducing the owners of wells after discovery to retain their oil in the ground until it is needed. These unforeseeable influences upon supply result in extreme and rapid fluctuations of price, and a consequent unsettling of the mechanical operations of the industry.

The Interest of the Consumer.

Obviously, the consumer must eventually pay the ultimate cost of producing, together with a reasonable profit to the industry, if it continues to function—and the need of its continuing to function is, of course, without question. It is, therefore, the interest of the consumer that the petroleum industry be permitted to function efficiently and with a minimum waste. If prices alone is permitted to control the operation of the industry, then these price fluctuations will, due to the characteristics of the industry, be so extreme as to result in a few moments abandoning and scrapping both of producing wells and refining plants in periods of overproduction, such as is the present period, that will in a very short time thereafter be again badly needed.

Big Production Doesn't Last.

Oil wells are most productive at their birth and rapidly decline for the first six months and then slowly decline to the point of exhaustion. It has been stated that of the 2 million barrels of oil produced daily in the United States more than one-half is produced by less than four thousand wells, while less than one-half of the daily production comes from the remaining 25,000 small producing wells—i. e., 1 1/2 per cent of the wells in the United States are now producing in excess of 50 per cent of its daily production.

Yet this 98 1/2 per cent of wells are necessary, both to the industry and to the public, for the large wells of today will be small wells in a few months and the large wells alone do not produce enough oil even temporarily to supply the demand.

It is to the benefit of the public that a price be maintained for the producer of this 98 1/2 per cent of the wells equal to the average cost of operation of these wells, for, should the price fall below and continue for long below the cost of operation, these wells will be abandoned, as many of their owners have no means of temporary overproduction. These 25,000 wells are the only remaining wells from fifty years of operation in the industry and from six hundred thousand that have been abandoned could not be replaced.

Idleness Destroys Oil Wells.

After a well is abandoned, its usefulness is forever gone. It is not like the farmer's field that may lie idle this year and produce a crop next; idleness for a protracted period spells a permanent loss. The degree to which this is equally true of refining plants. It is therefore necessary both for the industry and the public that, while the operation of the law of supply and demand should be permitted to operate on the price to such an extent as will give to consumers and the producer a fair and reasonable price, it should not be permitted to operate to an extent that will cause, on account of the periods of temporary overproduction, a decline in price to the point that will cause premature abandonment of very necessary wells and facilities.

The decline of new large wells is naturally so rapid that if the drilling of new wells in the United States ceased entirely for a period of three months the production of oil would decline to a point not in excess of the consuming demand.

Adjust Refining To Demand.

In like manner, if the refining plants in the United States, and particularly in the Midcontinent district would curtail their operations for a short period, a very great excess of gasoline would be produced and the Midcontinent refiners would find on their hands would be absorbed and the industry would then assume a healthy condition.

Naturally, it will be impossible and unwise to close down completely all drilling and in like manner it will be impossible and unwise to close down all refining operations, and there can be no satisfactory stabilization of the industry unless the producer and the refiner continue to operate on the basis of producing wells until such time as consumption and production equalize by the natural increase of wells and the constantly increasing consumption.

Keep the Oil in the Ground.

It is manifestly to the great benefit of the consuming public that such curtailment of the output of wells be exercised as will serve to keep the oil in the ground where it will be stored, unrefined, without storage costs, evaporation and avoidable waste and will prevent the continuance of a condition under which producers and refiners are compelled to bring the oil from the ground in order to secure their proportionate share of the same and to place it in the hands of the consumer where a very considerable portion of the most valuable part evaporates, for the cost and waste of an industry must be absorbed by the consumer.

It is therefore highly essential, both to the welfare of the consuming public and the industry, that the members of the industry agree to curtail their operations to the point of equalizing their respective individual policies so as to reduce the amount of output to the amount of demand, and to manufacture products to a degree that will equalize supply and demand, and so that the products can be handled in such manner as to prevent waste and to place the industry during this very temporary period of overproduction and as will not compel the premature abandonment of numbers of wells and refining facilities.

Can't Compete With California.

It must be borne in mind that so long as the flood of California petroleum lasts, not a barrel of oil or a barrel of gasoline can be sold from the Midcontinent to the markets of the Atlantic seaboard and Europe, and the Midcontinent to the exclusion of a barrel of oil or a barrel of gasoline from California. It is as impossible to sell petroleum or gasoline from the Midcontinent to the markets of the Atlantic seaboard and Europe, regardless of price, as it is to make water run up hill, on account of the cost of transportation.

California Flood Temporary. The great flood of oil from California is only temporary condition. Moreover, the central part of the United States represents the future big market for the oil that can be produced within its own limits. For every barrel now wasted or shipped out, another barrel from outside must eventually be brought in at much higher cost to the consumer. It is, therefore, to the public welfare that the petroleum resources and facilities be conserved. Extremely low prices of a temporary demoralization will not compensate for the immediately succeeding higher prices necessary for revitalization.

The companies which I represent, have been curtailing production since the overproduction of crude became apparent. We are producing today approximately one-half of what would have been our production at this time, had we not curtailed our operations.

Our large contracts for the sale of crude oil and gasoline, which extended until over next year, can be supplied by us, if we operate on our present capacity. After September 1 it will be our policy to operate only at a capacity necessary to fill our contracts.

Suspend Refining a Month.

Our refinery has for some time been operating at one-half its full capacity. Yesterday we discontinued refining crude altogether for the month of August. This action we have taken with a view to preventing waste and conserving the oil or the future when the consuming public will so badly need this oil. This is the policy I would recommend as the one for each Midcontinent producer and refiner to study so long as an overproduction in other fields, such as California, exists and excludes our products from our former markets. We, each of us, must by intelligent curtailment of our output from our wells and through our plants, adjust ourselves to our present restricted markets and to the present economic conditions of our industry, hereby preventing waste, conserving the petroleum resources of the country and earning the approval of the consuming public.

NANCY ran in, her arms full of brown November leaves, the last that had clung to the little oak tree on the lawn.

"They'll look perfectly ducky with tawny artemisias and a bit of evergreen," she said. "A small yellow pumpkin and some rosy pears and apples cuddled in these branches, and the Laidlaw candlesticks with two big yellow candles. It will make our Thanksgiving table shine."

Nancy went to her sister, who had not turned at her entrance, but stood looking out of the window at the fallen leaves scurrying across the lawn.

"What's the matter, Nancy?"

Jane turned then briskly, her face flushed with the effort to hold back tears. "I don't see how you can fool yourself so, Nan," she exclaimed. "Thanksgiving! Oh, I guess we have things to be thankful for on the general theory that you ought to be glad to be alive. But I confess I can't see any reason for making a burrah about it this year."

Nancy laughed. "Read your history book, Miss Schoolteacher. Thanksgiving is not proclaimed for celebrating the fortunes of the Laidlaw family, but just the general welfare of the U. S. A."

Jane smiled in spite of herself. "Well, we're part of the nation, aren't we? You're a little ruder," she said tenderly as she saw signs of tears on her sister's cheek. "But I suppose you're right. We can go through the motions of having a regular home, anyway."

"This home is regular enough, whatever else it is," said Nancy with her ready laugh. "I believe Aunt Janet would get seasick if there were more chairs on one side of a room than the other."

There was, indeed, little in common between Miss Janet Laidlaw Fiske, head mistress of the Fiske Acres School for Girls, and her two nieces and assistants. Nan and Jane had been "half-educated all over the world," as their aunt said accusingly, by their

BORN TAILORS GUILD

Belts Versus Suspenders

FOR several years belts have entirely replaced the old-time suspenders. Thousands of men never wear suspenders at all except with formal dress suits. Those who cling to the older fashion claim it is not good for one's health to draw the belt as tight as it is necessary to keep the trousers up, while belt enthusiasts counteract this hygienic consideration with a charge that suspenders tend to make a man round-shouldered.

The kind of belt that is worn, however, is attracting a good deal of attention from smart dressers. Belts are getting wider, more colorful and in a greater range of material than ever before. There are the usual belts of cowhide with smooth or pebble grain. These range from one to two inches in width and usually come in black, russet or cordovan. Leather belts may also be had in bright colors suitable for sports wear and with light flannels.

Silk and leather combinations are on the market, as are the webbing belts in an almost endless variety of regimental orders. In wearing multi-colored belts, select one of the colors as the key for socks, ties and bordered handkerchiefs and stick to it throughout in the matter of accessories.

Predictions are that suspenders will come back to effect the new straight-drape trousers which are to be the successor of the bell-bottomed "bags." Only by hanging on the eight buttonholes of the suspenders can this desirable straight line be obtained. A concealed suspender worn underneath the shirt is due to gain favor.

Artist father. When he died—"Involuntarily, of course," Miss Fiske commented—she had felt it her duty to provide for them. Besides, their knowledge of languages and art, she thought, might be valuable to her school, even though they knew little else. The rigid, old-fashioned school for girls had dwindled so far that cheap teachers were a consideration.

Her nieces, staggered by the death of their merry, wonderful father, with debts their only inheritance and just enough knowledge of life to realize that it would be hard for two young ladies who knew everything in general and nothing in particular to find employment, had welcomed this offer—at first. They had come from their gipsying life to this grim, prim school in the hills.

"The worst of it is that Aunt Janet's as sorry as we are that she asked us. We've not been a success, Nan," Jane sighed. "Heigho! Anyway, they'll all be away over Thanksgiving, even Aunt Janet, and we'll have each other alone. You're not listening, Nan?"

Nan's eyes were shining.

"A regular home?" she was repeating. "Jane, let's have one just for us."

Nancy rushed her sister in. The servants dismissed, the tors stole into the pretty nestled in the wild back room no one passed. Soon they were arranging their home-for-a-dung the pictures on the wall—pleasant, painful personality—she saw Jane set the companionable books on the shelves.

Next day, Thanksgiving took possession. The Laidlaw sticks with their yellow pumpkins, fruit and autumn tions graced the green-stained dinner was keeping warm o stove and the pretty peas were waiting to receive it.

Friday evening Nov. 20th the famous production 'The Lost World' will be shown at the church at 7:30. This is probably one of the greatest pictures ever filmed by the motion picture industry.
Sunday Nov. 22nd. Bible School at 9:30 A. M. The morning service of worship at 10:30. Every service aims to help us be better fit to cope with the tasks and problems of daily living. The church aims to combine fellowship and worship.

Sunday evening at 7:30, a moving picture entitled "Some Peculiar Victims". The sermon is "Getting Pulled in". You are welcome to the service.
Also remember that a special 3 reel story entitled "Shall We Forget?" will be shown on Sunday evening Nov. 29th.
The Guild will have an all day meeting Thursday Nov. 19th at the parsonage.

At the Sunday morning service on Nov. 8th the District Superintendent Dr. E. G. Schultz preached. His subject was based on the conception that love is the outstanding need of the family life, church life, and community co-operation. Love in its larger aspect means, "good will toward all men." After the morning service the First Quarterly Conference was held.
At the evening service on Nov. 8th the moving picture film showed life among the peasants of Southern India, particularly emphasizing the original stock of inhabitants known as "Dravidians". This picture was followed by an address on India by Mr. Dan Singh a native of India. A feature of the evening was a solo by Mr. E. N. Lindgren of Goodspeed Hall, University of Chicago. Both Dr. Schultz and Mr. Dan Singh were guests at the parsonage.

The Entre Nous Club will give a play entitled "Just Like Percy" at the Orland Park School auditorium on the evenings of December 2nd and 3rd. On the evening of December 3rd a dance will be held at the close of the play.

OAK LAWN

The Southwest District Camp Fire Guardians Association was held at the home of Mrs. Quillhot, 6330 Indiana Ave., Chicago one day last week. Miss Ruth Utt and Miss Elsie Skinner, Guardian and Assistant attended this meeting and great plans have been made for the remainder of the year. The Southwest District of Camp Fire is planning a Week end camping trip at Camp Kiwanis, at Palos Park for Nov. 13, 14 and 15. A Council Fire and Treasure Hunt will be some of the features. The girls of Nusapi Camp Fire will leave Friday night on the Buss and will return Sunday evening.

The Nusapi Camp Fire Girls and their friends held a Halloween Masquerade Party in the Sunday School Room of the Congregational church. The customs they wore represented most every nation on the globe. Games were played and refreshments served and a good time had by all present.

A farewell party was given in the school on October 30th by the first four rooms in honor of the Ver Heyden children who are leaving to make their home in Paris, France. The boys who are taking Manual training under the supervision of Miss Koelle, presented the three girls with a doll, which they had made. Mesdames, Ver Heyden, Wilson and Hopkins were guests. Refreshments were served.

Delmar Skinner entertained his friend, Bert Jenner of the University of Illinois, at dinner Sunday.

The Blind Mind of the Lost Man

By REV. H. OSTROM, D. D.
Extension Department, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost in whom the god of this age hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God should shine unto them.—II Cor. 4:3, 4.

Here we have a lost gospel and lost men, and the lost men are blind. The gospel does not appear because hidden, and a blind man makes a poor hunter. Worse still, the blind man himself is lost.

We are repeatedly reminded of hearing the gospel but in this Scripture it is a matter of seeing it. When the teacher tells the pupil that two and two are four and the pupil says "I see," he sees the truth in arithmetic; so in respect to seeing the truth about Christ as Savior. It is hidden to the lost man and his best effort would only be seeking it with blind eyes.

The case would be utterly hopeless were it not that right where the sinner is lost is ONE who came all the way to find him. Glorious fact, there alone is the dawn of hope. If a man admits he is lost what folly for him to reject this truth. "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." The seeker of souls is after the souls that are lost. He can open blind eyes. He can bring to light the hidden gospel. When that is found, it is found by the soul saying, "I am lost but Jesus has come to find and save me." It is as if one were to stumble upon the jewel. What then? The blindness goes. Meet Jesus and you have the gospel. See HIM (by faith) and you see the gospel.

Thus, on the one hand it is a discovery, and on the other it is a recovery.

1. The Discovery. Facts not formerly apprehended become known. There is light, the light of the glorious gospel, which human reasoning could never discover, but which the Spirit of Truth imparts. As when a new star is charted the astronomer advertises it, so here it is the gospel luminary now seen which formerly was not seen. It is the light of the knowledge of Christ. It is the light of the wisdom which cometh from above. Polar flights may interest us for the moment because of the remarkable discoveries possible, but this discovery of eternal truth may be yours without your rising from the chair. After all, for it there are no uncharted seas. To become a Christian is to make a wonderful discovery. The eyes of the heart then look upon a new world of truth.

2. The Recovery. Not only that which was not has been found but that which was (a menace) has gone. It is so throughout the gospel. We not only need to grasp new facts, we need also to lose our blindness. The gospel is hid to the lost because shine is not shine to them. Satan has made light appear as darkness and "how great is that darkness!" But the opened eyes and, lo, light is light! Could a man understand it so as to properly picture it until his own eyes are opened? We call to our fellows and we say that we have found the gospel of the grace of God, we heard it announced, we were told to look to the cross of Christ and live, we put the message to the test. We looked, and lo, we live! Our eyes have been opened, the lost gospel is found, the god of this age has been defeated in his scheme to blind us forever. Fellow sinner, both the discovery and the recovery are yours if you will but receive Christ. Just begin there—receive Him. When we read, "but if our gospel be hid," the words intimate that so far as the power is concerned it has been announced and proclaimed with power. And it has been plainly given, out and out.

The whole issue is the blinder versus the sight-giver, the burglar versus the bestower, the wrecker versus the Savior.

Remember, then, that just to receive Christ who seeks you is to prove the eyes opened, the hidden gospel found, and yourself no longer a lost man.

Evil Influences

Any influence that would take us from our church, draw one particle of strength from the household of faith with which we have cast our lot, whatever its name, is not born of Christian endeavor, and savors not of it. First, the church; second, our own church and every interest of the bride of Christ.—J. Wilbur Chapman.

Yield All to Christ

Let the Christ talk to you, and do not merely consent intellectually, but yield volitionally, definitely, positively, handing over your life, with all its fair and radiant possibilities and with all your sense of failure, to Him, and He will perfect that which concerneth you.—G. Campbell Morgan.

The Gift of God

The life of peace, of patience, of simplicity, of purity, of hope, of love—the holy life—it is the gift, the ever-present gift of God; and it is given through faith in His blessed Son.—H. C. G. Moule.

PAUL'S ARREST IN JERUSALEM

LESSON TEXT—Acts 21:18-23:22.
GOLDEN TEXT—"If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed."
PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul Is Brave in Danger.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul and the Jerusalem Mob.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Paul Faces a Mob.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Spirit of the Mob.

I. Paul's Vow (21:18-26).

Upon Paul's arrival at Jerusalem representatives of the church there gave him a most cordial reception. In order that the brethren in Jerusalem might graciously receive him, it was proposed to him by the elders that he take a Jewish vow to prove that he was in no way opposed to the law. The effort was to remove prejudice. They recognized that such an act would in no way compromise or involve the Gentile brethren. Furthermore this would not compromise his own principles of action, viz., to the Jews he became a Jew, and to the Gentiles, a Gentile; all things to all men in order to gain them for Christ.

II. Paul's Arrest (21:27-40).

How far this act conciliated the Jews we are not told, but it only enraged the unbelieving Jews, causing them to resort to mob law. These maddened Jews on the basis of a supposition seized him and dragged him from the temple and beat him mercilessly intending to put him to death. Paul was rescued from the mob by the Roman guard. The chief captain, not being able to get any information from the howling mob, bound Paul and started for the castle. In order to protect him from the murderous frenzy of the mob, the soldiers lifted him upon their shoulders and bore him up the stairs. Paul kept himself under control, and politely asked permission of the captain to speak to the people. When he addressed him in Greek and quoted his Roman citizenship, the captain granted his request.

III. Paul's Defense (22:1-27).

Paul's chief concern was not his own safety. He used this opportunity to witness unto them of Christ.

1. His Claim for a Rightful Hearing (vv. 1-3).

(1) His birth (v. 3).
He was a Jew born in Tarsus, a city of no mean reputation.

(2) His Education (v. 3).
He was educated under Gamaliel and instructed "according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers."

(3) His Zeal (v. 3).
He was as zealous toward God as those Jews who were trying to destroy him.

2. His Attitude Toward Jesus (vv. 4-5).
"I persecuted this way unto the death," so that his attitude was one of hatred as was that of the Jews.

3. How His Attitude Was Changed (vv. 6-16).
While on his way to Damascus with authority to bind the Christians at Jerusalem, he was smitten to the ground by a light from heaven, and the voice of the Lord said, "Why persecutest thou me?" When Paul inquired what he was to do, he was told to go to Damascus where he would be told what to do.

4. The Lord Commissioned Him to Go to the Gentiles (17-21).
IV. Paul Before the Sanhedrin (23:1-10).

The Roman officer, in order to learn why Paul was arrested, commanded the chief council to assemble, and brought Paul before them.

1. Paul's Earnest Look at the Council (vv. 1-2).
This was a solicitation of their honor to give him a fair hearing, and also a look of conscious integrity and unflinching courage.

2. Paul's Stern Rebuke of the Head of the Council (v. 3).
"God shall smite thee, thou whitened wall."

3. Paul's Appeal to the Pharisees (vv. 6-10).
Seeing that he could not get a fair hearing, and perceiving that the body before him was made up of Pharisees and Sadducees, he appealed to the Pharisees hoping to get their attention, for his preaching had something in common with their belief.

V. The Lord Stood by Paul (v. 11).
This assured him that his course was right, and thus comfort was brought to him.

VI. The Conspiracy to Kill Paul (vv. 18-22).
More than forty men placed themselves under a curse to abstain from eating and drinking until they had murdered him. God defeated their plan without a miracle.

Darkness

The darkness which is the result of the absence of the light which others ought to shed is bad enough; but how great is the darkness of disbelief and unbelief into which some will voluntarily plunge!—The Mennonite.

Dainty Gifts You Can Buy or Make

"Just to Remind You"

This is the inscription across the top of a slate, or pad or pencil, to hang in the kitchen. It is made decorative by a brilliant Polly that stands guard over it, and is a great convenience to the housewife who can jot down on it things needed from the grocer or other details that may slip the memory. The parrot is cut from printed crepe paper, pasted to a cardboard backing and tacked or glued to place.

Fashionable Rag Rugs

All the pretty old-timey rugs, made of rags, that are a precious heritage from Colonial days, are flourishing in the smile of fashion. The best of all gifts are those made by the hands of the donor and women have revived the old art of hooking, weaving or plaiting rag rugs. Here is a hooked rug made of bits of rags hooked through a burlap foundation on which the pattern is marked.

Crisp Service Sets

New varieties are disclosed in the annual crop of aprons which the Christmas season presents. This year crisp, white service sets—including an apron, collar and cuffs to match, appeal to our sense of neatness. An immaculate set is pictured, made of white lawn, with folds for trimming.

Weird Merry-makers

Grotesque and merry sprites are invading milady's boudoir, to the amusement of all who enter there. They are fashioned of wire, short lengths of yarn and bits of cloth, and some of them stand guard over small boxes which may contain beauty secrets. Others are made to be hung like the fierce looking Turk at the left of the two weird creatures pictured.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

THE DEADLY FLY

FEW of us realize how completely our ideas regarding flies have changed. Those of us who are middle-aged can remember that, as children, we were taught to look on flies as harmless innocent little creatures. They were allowed to come into the house, to buzz around the kitchen, to walk on the table, crawl on the food, both before and after cooking, fall into the baby's milk and do as they pleased, without anyone being horrified or even annoyed by them. Children were taught to sing "Baby Bye, there's a fly, let us watch him, you and I." The ideal of benevolence and kindness was the man who "wouldn't even hurt a fly."

Few people then went to the trouble to screen doors or windows, and they were regarded as "fussy." Hotel dining rooms and restaurants, some of them were provided with fly brushes, worked by cords, to chase the flies off the tables. Wealthy people, especially in the South had servants stand behind them at the dinner table and keep the flies away with long-handled fans. The farmer's wife had a small bought cut off a tree, or a broom handle with long strips of newspaper tacked on one end, to chase away the flies that came in to dinner from the barnyard, the manure pile, the cesspool and the outhouses.

We didn't know then what we know now, that the fly is the most dangerous wild animal in existence, that if allowed to breed and roam unchecked, he will cause more deaths than the lion or the man-eating tiger.

We know now that the fly is not only the most dangerous but also the filthiest animal in existence, that it breeds in filth and that it carries on its legs the germs of typhoid fever, diarrhea, dysentery and cholera infantum.

The fly has no place in the kitchen, the dining room, the bedrooms, or any part of a clean, well-managed home. Every house, and especially every dining room, kitchen, storeroom and every other place where food is stored and handled, should be screened. In order to keep out flies during the breeding season, the screens should be put in place early in the spring and kept on until cold weather.

There are two times in the year, especially when flies, the few that get into the house, should be relentlessly hunted, the early spring to prevent the young flies from breeding, and the late fall to prevent the old flies from living over until the next spring. These times are when they are few and conspicuous, and each dead fly means the prevention of thousands later on.

CLEANING UP THE OYSTER

EVERYBODY remembers the oyster scare last winter. Just in the middle of the oyster season, epidemics of typhoid fever developed in New York, Chicago and several other large cities. Investigation showed that the disease was caused by polluted oysters. The national and state health officers made extended surveys. A conference called at Washington, including health officers and representatives of the oyster dealers, found that the infection came from two or three places on the Atlantic coast where oysters taken from salt-water beds were "planted" near the mouths of rivers to fatten. They did fatten, but they fattened on sewage-polluted fresh water. These typhoid-laden oysters were mixed in tanks and cans with clean oysters, polluting the lot. Distributed all over the country, they caused a considerable number of cases of typhoid.

As soon as the facts were made known through the newspapers everybody stopped eating oysters. Nearly everybody likes oysters, but nobody wants oysters plus typhoid fever germs. Of course, thorough cooking would kill the germs, but even cooked typhoid germs are not popular. As a result the bottom fell out of the oyster business and for the last half of the winter there was "nothing doing" in the oyster line.

Now, that was tough on the oyster men, most of whom were marketing perfectly good oysters and were in no way to blame. But as was shown by the ripe olive scare a few years ago, when an article of food comes under popular suspicion the public does not discriminate and the good suffer with the bad. Last winter was not a very happy time for the man whose money was invested in the oyster business.

But oyster dealers learned that any mistakes on the part of one hurt them all. So now the oyster dealers are the most insistent on guarding the purity of their goods. The United States public health service has worked out a program for protecting oysters from pollution and all oyster beds from Cape Cod to Texas are to be guarded by federal and state health officers and by the oyster men themselves.

Whenever purity in food means business success and profits and pollution means losses and bankruptcy, you don't need to worry about police regulations. The industry will purify itself or it won't be an industry very long.

So don't worry about oysters this winter. Buy them and eat them. They will probably be better and purer than they ever have been before.

WRIGLEY'S AFTER EVERY MEAL

THE FLAVOR LASTS

Probably one reason for the popularity of WRIGLEY'S is that it lasts so long and returns such great dividends for so small an outlay. * It keeps teeth clean, breath sweet, appetite keen, digestion good. Fresh and full-flavored always in its wax-wrapped package.

The EVANSHIRE

In Chicago's Most Beautiful Suburb EVANSTON

The Evanshire in Evanston is closer to Chicago's business, shopping and amusement center than are many Chicago hotels. Surface, elevated and steam transportation lines, a block distant, make fast time to Chicago's "Loop". Thus at the Evanshire you can have the convenience of location of a Chicago hotel in the environment of Chicago's wealthiest and most beautiful suburb. And charges throughout, including the restaurant, are notably moderate, although in equipment, service, environment and class of patronage the Evanshire holds high rank.

The Evanshire is at Main and Hinman streets, only a few blocks from glorious old Lake Michigan. European plan. Rates are from $3.00 a day up for single and $5.00 up for double rooms, all with private bath. Write today for illustrated folder.

Cold Logic

To Elbert H. Gary, the head of the United States Steel corporation, is credited the most apt reply to a question of stock value.

"Do you think steel stocks will go up or down?" a woman once asked him.

"Yes," was the answer, "I think they will. They rarely stand still, and they can't go sideways!"—Watchman-Examiner.

MOKENA, ILL.

Christmas is fast approaching! The few weeks will roll by quickly between now and the Yuletide Season. What to give or send for Christmas is always a big problem. We therefore wish to call your attention to several items listed below, which we feel will be very pretty as well as useful gifts to send. Drop in our office early in the season if you are in town or else send us your orders by mail or call us on the phone. Trusting to be favored with your orders.

Christmas Greeting Cards

We are carrying an excellent line of Christmas Greeting Cards which will be sure to please. These cards are very beautiful and in many designs. They come complete with your name printed on them in either Old English or Script type faces and envelopes ready to mail at prices ranging from 6 cents and up. Now is the time to select your cards.

Printed Personal Stationery

Stationery is always an acceptable and very useful Xmas gift. We are offering a special feature in the way of printed personal stationery. We are offering 200 sheets of bond linen finish white writing paper and 100 envelopes with the name and address of yourself or your friends or relatives printed in a neat type face in either black or blue ink. This is a real bargain offer at $1.00. Place your orders early.

Cards and Card Cases

Our new and big feature, one which has not been offered here before is a tooled leather card case in black or gray with 100 cards of either Mr. Mrs. or Miss size with name or name and address printed thereon in Old English, Script or plain Gothic type faces for only $2.00. (This means a tool leather card case and 100 printed cards. This is known as a hinged card case, that is the cards are punched and scored which keeps them always neat and in the case. Cards are easily removed by parting at perforation.) Let us have your order for this attractive, inexpensive but very useful Xmas gift.

Cordially yours,
THE NEWS-BULLETIN.
